

Galaxy4Gamers To Offer Professional Video Game Training Sessions

Fans Can Now Train with the Best Video Game Athletes Using G4G's Exclusive Beat-A-Pro Platform

Los Angeles, CA - September 30, 2010 - Galaxy4Gamers (G4G), a leading video game community and online tournament specialist, announced today a brand new feature to their ever expanding Beat-A-Pro platform that allow professional video game athletes to train fans while allowing fans to improve upon their skill. The personal training sessions will allow up-and-coming gamers to learn from the best video game athletes in private online one-on-one instructional settings for a small fee.

"Private training sessions are something our customers were asking for, so we decided to give it to them. By allowing fans to have personalized training sessions with real pro gamers, we are helping them improve their skill level which in turn ups the intensity of competition found within our tournaments. Not only do up-and-coming video game athletes get to improve upon their skill, but those who are good enough to train can now earn income," said CEO of Galaxy4Gamers, Chris Doe.

The addition of allowing for online training sessions showcases G4G's commitment to continuing the expansion of the Beat-A-Pro platform. The professional training sessions join the recently announced expanded Beat-A-Pro platform offering where users can become professional video game players, host challenges and reap the financial benefits. The expanded Beat-A-Pro platform allows members to design and implement fully customizable tournament schedules with self-determined buy-in and payout values, live chat, HD streaming, recorded matches, and personal branding. The release of the new API service and expanded Beat-A-Pro offering, alongside the original platform, continues to showcase why Galaxy4Gamers is the top video game tournament destination on the web.
